TO THOSE WHO CAN UNDERSTAND IT. Will ye list in that Southern land A while to a strain of mine

From the cold bleak North where oaks are yet bare, And the snow rustles down in the pine? When yet in the forest hower The violet hides its head,

And I search in valo for the fragrant flower To strew o'er the early dead.

Will ye do one thing for me, Though trivial it may seem, "Twill soothe the shade of one ye have loved

And charges the rhymer's dreams ; All lovely and starry oyed,

Will ye cull the loveliest of Southern bloom Where the forest streamlets glide : The frailest and fairest flowers. Emblems of love and truth, And strew them macridly over the grave

Of one I have loved from youth? Here she left a lonely hearth. To your land her sweetness gave; Ye prized full well her holy worth, And gave her an honored grave,

Have ye forgot her smile. Or the soul in her eye's deep bine, Or the lily brow, or the cheeks of rose Caressed by curis of brown hue? She was beautiful as the flowers,

As genial as your sort clime, For her will ye gather in dewy hours
